Introduction

The Information Bulletin of Australian Criminology is usually published on a quarterly basis. Production problems have delayed publication of the 1986 issues. This issue is a cumulation covering indexing output for the entire year.

The Information Bulletin is essentially a printed product generated from the quarterly updates of the CINCH database. CINCH, the Australian Criminology Database, is produced at the Institute by the staff of the J.V. Barry Memorial Library and is publicly available through AUSINET (ACI Computer Services).

The Institute is currently reviewing the Information Bulletin. We would appreciate your comments. Please address them to:

This is being researched by an independent group of researchers working in the criminal justice field. The address: Legal aid Commission, Rawson Place, Sydney. Funded by the Law Foundation. Duration of research is 6 months
Local profiles of Aboriginal communities which exhibit different crime rates will be compared in an attempt to note structures within societies that are positive or negative to the social cohesion of Aboriginal communities
- 1958 Strategies to reduce the number of Aboriginals gaoled in south Australia for non payment of fines, and to monitor the effectiveness of these strategies
Moriarty, John
Research conducted under the auspices of the Cabinet Task Force on Aboriginals and Criminal Justice, and the South Australian Office of Aboriginal Affairs; funded by the Criminology Research Council ($25, 000). Principal Investigator: Mr John Moriarty: Director, Office of Aboriginal Affairs, 50 Grenfell St, Adelaide, SA, 5000: Phone (08) 213 3494
The research objective is to develop strategies to reduce numbers of Aboriginals gaoled in South Australia for non-payment of fines and to monitor the effectiveness of these strategies. The methodology will involve: - identifying South Australian courts where significant numbers of Aboriginals are fined for criminal offences and subsequently are gaoled for non-payment; - select an intervention and a control court; establish appropriate indicators for these courts; develop and implement an eight month intervention strategy for the experimental court; assess whether the relevant indicators change as a result of the intervention
- 1959 Aboriginal/ police/ community relations: East Kimberley Impact Assessment Project

Under the auspices of the East Kimberley Impact Assessment Project, Centre for Resource and Environmental Studies, Australian National University. Funded by the Criminology Research Council ($21, 771). Contact: Christine Stafford, Centre for Multicultural Studies, Armidale College of Advanced Education, Armidale, NSW 2350. Phone: (067) 728491
Brief summary of research project: The proposed research is part of the East Kimberley Impact Assessment Project being jointly undertaken by the Centre for Resource and Environmental Studies (A. N. U.), University of Western Australia and the Australian Institute of Aboriginal Studies. The objectives of this particular component are two-fold. Firstly, it aims to assess the socio-legal impact of mining on Aboriginal people in the East Kimberley region by gathering both qualitative and quantitative data. Secondly, in connection with the proposed 1987 research by Associate Professor Paul Wilson (A. I. C.) and Professor Duncan Chappell (Simon Fraser University, Vancouver) into areas of black/ white conflict in Australia, it is intended that this research will provide data on one of the four focus 'conflict' areas. The initial research will be undertaken in December 1986 - January/ February 1987 together with one follow-monitoring trip closer to the time at which the Wilson/ Chappell/ Stafford project nears completion

CORRECTIONS

- 1961 Hidden punishment and hidden labour
Aungles, Ann
Ph. D. thesis with Sociology Department, University of Wollongong. Funded under the Commonwealth Postgraduate Scholarship. Estimated date of completion February 1988. Contact: Ann Aungles, Sociology Department, University of Wollongong, NSW 2500
Brief summary of research project: An investigation of the impact of penal policies on women related to sentenced men, within an analysis that focuses on contradictions within liberal capitalism of two ideologies - familism and individualism. The basic propositions framing the research are that both imprisonment and community based sentences are likely to have hidden consequences for families of sentenced men

CORRUPTION

Byrne, Paul
Under the auspices of the New South Wales Law Reform Commission. Duration of research: March 1986 to September 1986
The current research is directed towards the publication of a Discussion Paper for community and professional consultation. The topics to be examined include the structure, procedure, powers and role of appellate courts in New South Wales and the rights of parties in criminal litigation to review the decisions of courts in criminal cases

CRIMINOLOGY

- 1964 Rural Crime: a community perspective
O' Connor, Michael E; Gray, David E
Research conducted under the auspices of the Sociology Department, University of New England; funded by the Criminology Research Council ($13, 500). Estimated date of completion April 1987. Contact: David E Gray: Lecturer in Sociology, University of New England, Armidale NSW 2351: Phone (067) 733333
This project will be an in-depth study of a rural community's understanding of crime, criminals and criminality. In particular we will examine the community's fear of crime, concern about crime and crime avoidance behaviours. The community is the central organising concept in this research. We will use a multimethod approach to our research and analysis that is compatible with a community study. This approach to our research will include observational analysis, survey research and the analysis of historical documents

HOMICIDE

1967 Homicide in South Australia

Barnett, Adrian

Research under the auspices of the South Australian Office of Crime Statistics, funded by the South Australian Government. Duration of research 12 months. Contact: Adrian Barnett: South Australian Office of Crime Statistics, GPO Box 464, Adelaide, South Aust, 5001

Analysis of patterns of homicide in South Australia from 1976 to 1985

JUVENILES

1968 Children's understanding of the legal system

Bussey, Kay; Cashmore, Judy

Research conducted under the auspices of Macquarie University, funded by the Criminology Research Council ($21, 944). Estimated date of completion Dec 1986. Contact: Dr Kay Bussey: Senior Lecturer, School of Behavioural Sciences, Macquarie University, NSW 2119: Phone (02) 889644

The aim of this project is to investigate children's understanding of court procedures, their own role in the proceedings and their perception of the role of legal representation. The project consists of two main studies which will explore children's understanding of proceedings in children's courts both with children who are involved in such proceedings and with children who are not involved and have no experience of such proceedings

1969 Children and the court process

O' Connor, Ian

Criminology Research Council Grant of $5, 747. Dr Ian O' Connor is from the Department of Social Work, University of Queensland

An examination of the way children understand the Children's Court process when they have appeared before the courts on a criminal charge. The outcomes of the research will have significant implications for service delivery by professionals in the juvenile court system.

1970 Randomised clinical trial of brief behaviourally-oriented interventions for pre-delinquents

Sanson-Fisher, Robert; Redman, Selina

Research conducted under the auspices of the Faculty of Medicine, University of Newcastle; funded by the Criminology Research Council ($32, 056). Estimated date of completion May 1987. Contact : Prof R Sanson-Fisher: Faculty of Medicine, Univ of Newcastle, Newcastle NSW 2308: Phone: (049) 685545

The proposed research will: 1. Examine the test-retest reliability and construct validity of a teacher-administered behavioural assessment instrument suitable for pre-delinquents. 2. Examine the prevalence and type of behavioural problems in approximately 800 adolescents in the Hunter Region. 3. Evaluate the effectiveness of short-term behaviourally-orientated interventions in decreasing the frequency of disruptive behaviour in pre-delinquents

1971 Court language: children's language: an examination of children's responses to questions in court

Brennan, Mark

Under the auspices of the Riverina-Murray Institute of Higher Education. Funded by the Criminology Research Council ($15, 650). Estimated date of completion March 1988. Contact: Mark Brennan, Lecturer, School of Education, RMIHE, Box 588, Wagga Wagga NSW 2650.: Phone (069) 232448 ext. 441

Brief summary of research project: This research project will detail and present instances of the mismatch between the language capabilities of young children and the language requirements of the courtroom in taking evidence. Especial reference will be made to instances where children are allowed/ required to give evidence in cases which involve themselves as having been abused. It will highlight issues which permeate and define the use of words in this special context, viz. questioning, authority, conceptual development, lexical competence, grammatical style. These considerations are basic to the validity and import of what children have to say in court and what officers of the court need to understand in order to capitalise on this fundamental body of evidence (what children say) in trying to establish truth. The outcome of the research will be, in the first instance, a research report, the results of which will be of particular use to officers of the court primarily prosecutors and magistrates. The research findings will contribute greatly to clarity in the giving and taking of evidence and will certainly strengthen the status of children through a clearer understanding of what they say, and why and how they say what they do. The research will be re-presented and edited into a subsequent publication for the use of the intended readership. Articles for both a legal as well as a counselling readership will be prepared

1972 Attributions of responsibility for unlawful behaviour: a developmental study

Siegal, Michael

Research conducted under the auspices of the Dept of Psychology, Univ of Queensland; funded by the Criminology Research Council ($3, 062). Estimated date of completion 31 March 1987. Contact: Dr M Siegal: Dept of Psychology, Univ of Queensland, St Lucia Qld 4067: Phone (07) 3772651

The purpose of the study is to examine the attributions of adolescents for unlawful acts committed by persons of different ages. The objective is to ascertain the ages at which, despite a family environment conducive to lawful behaviour, offenders are ordinarily held to be internally responsible by their peers. The subjects will be 240 adolescents divided into four age groups (12, 14, 16, and 18 years), half from middle class areas. They will be required to make attributions for the behaviour of culprits described as 12, 14, 16 and 18 years old. The behaviours will consist of smoking, drinking, and stealing and will be presented in two conditions: first, without a description of the family environment and then again together with a description of uncaring parents and lack of adult supervision

LAW

1973 Reform of Australian firearm laws

Fine, J David

Research conducted under the auspices of the Faculty of Law, University of Western Australia; funded by the Criminology Research Council ($10, 531). Estimated date of completion 30 June 1987. Contact: Mr J David Fine: Faculty of Law, University of Western Australia, Nedlands West Aust 6009: Phone (09) 3802692

Summary of proposed research, objectives of research and research programme: Following the lead taken seven years ago by the Government of South Australia, an increasing number of Australian States have legislated to transfer certain decision-making functions concerning firearms licensing from police departments to mixed committees. Also, the pace of change in substantive legislation governing firearms ownership and use is increasing rapidly in the country. The project has two objectives: First, it aims to assess the effectiveness of different decision-making models in (a) assuring impartial exercise of discretion in firearms licensing; (b) assuring the due enforcement of applicable laws; and (c) inducing public confidence in, and compliance with, firearms controls. Within the context of the second objective, a proposal will, it is expected, be made for a paradigm firearms regulatory and/ or adjudicatory authority. Second, the project aims to canvass the perceptions of firearms users - of all types of which there are many - concerning their requirements in firearms legislation, and the areas in which they are content to have controls exercised. Extensive discussions will take place with police officials responsible for the administration and enforcement of the present state and territorial firearms laws, to determine their perceptions as to necessary fields of regulation, and appropriate administrative mechanisms. Discussions held to date with both groups suggest that both groups, firearms users and police, are desirous of making the laws in the field more purposive, and also suggest that frequently it may be possible to satisfy most of the perceived requirements of both groups. The project is intended to produce a reform proposal which affords full and appropriate safeguards against criminal, dangerous or antisocial uses of firearms, while placing no unnecessary restrictions upon the individual liberties of legitimate users of firearms

MASS MEDIA

1974 Media and criminal justice

Wilson, Paul; Grabosky, Peter

Research conducted under the auspices of the Australian Institute of Criminology, funded by the Institute. Duration of research: 18 months to 2 years. Contact: Dr Paul Wilson and Dr Peter Grabosky : Australian Institute of Criminology, PO Box 28, Woden ACT 2606: Phone (062) 833833

Media coverage of crime and criminal justice including areas such as juvenile delinquency, prison affairs, racial conflicts, ethnic-based crime, crime statistics, drugs, terrorism and hostage negotiation. The goal of the project is to contribute to improving the quality of crime and criminal justice reporting in Australia. In depth interviews will be held with a cross section of media representatives. Key issues will include what events are selected for coverage; how the coverage is managed and developed as a news story; and what ethical considerations bear upon media coverage of crime and criminal justice

PROBATION OR PAROLE

1975 Parole in South Australia

PUBLIC ORDER OFFENSES

1976 Public disorder in contemporary Australia

Under the auspices of the Flinders University of SA. Funded by the Criminology Research Council ($10, 719). Contact: Dr Robert Holton, Senior Lecturer in Sociology, Flinders University of SA, Bedford Park, SA 5042: Phone (08) 2752122

Brief summary of research project: The proposed research aims to provide a systematic description and analysis of both the main trends and the various types of public disorder in modern Australia. Systematic data will be generated dealing both with the overall incidence of public disorder since 1965, and with its specific incidence in such areas of social life as industrial relations, political protest, community relations (including inter-ethnic conflict) and leisure (including sport). Basing itself on the experience of a British study (Dunning et al., 1986) the research programme involves the collection of data from Australian newspapers in a machine readable form. The research will contribute to the capacity of governments and police to anticipate likely patterns of disorder and thus allocate adequate resources to the preservation of public order. It will also help to inform general public debate and allay any misconceptions that may exist as to the scale and intensity of public disorder in an epoch of unemployment, economic uncertainty, and multi-cultural immigration. The main effect on policy-making will be to provide contextual information to aid policy-makers and police strategists in deliberations about the allocations of resources. This research will aid the understanding of the likely demands on specialist tactical response group in the future, and assist debates concerned with the need for additional police training in such areas as riot control tactics, community policing and racism awareness training

SENTENCING

1977 Assess public opinion on the function of sentencing; examine whether the public's perception of the crime rate and current practices of the criminal justice system was realistic

Indermauer, David W

Research conducted under the auspices of the Prisons Department, Western Australia; funded by the Criminology Research Council ($11, 534). Estimated date of completion 31 November 1986. Contact : Mr David Indermauer: Clinical Psychologist (temporary), Prisons Department, 1004 Hay Street, Perth, Western Australia 6005: Phone (09) 4261200 or (09) 3354911

This study aims to assess public understanding of the sentencing of drug and other offenders. The assessment would include measures based on estimates of sentencing practise, public opinion regarding the goals of sentencing and opinion about specific offences and offenders. The first question that the research seeks to answer is; "how correct or realistic is the public's perception of the crime rate and the current practise of the criminal justice system." This question is addressed by posing questions to which we have "correct answers". This section encompasses a replication of salient items from a similar study undertaken in Canada (Doob and Roberts, 1983) which are important for the theoretical positions adopted by the study. Some items from earlier research conducted by the principal investigator (Broadhurst and Indermauer, 1982) are included for theoretical and comparative purposes. The study also attempts to assess public opinion on the functions of sentencing and how these functions relate to sentencing of specific offences and offenders the research includes a test of Doob and Roberts (1983) hypothesis that the context of the question can significantly offset public opinion on sentencing. In particular changing the form of the question to focus on the offender rather than the offence has the effect of softening the preferred sentence. These findings obviously have important implications for the validity and meaning of popular gallup poll type surveys on sentencing

1978 The Effect alternatives to imprisonment had on prisoner numbers and how the legislative changes resulting from these sentencing options would affect patterns of sentencing

Henderson, Monika

Research conducted under the auspices of the Research Unit, Office of Corrections, Victoria; funded by the Criminology Research Council ($23, 200). Estimated date of completion Dec 1987. Principal Investigator: Dr Monika Henderson: Manager, Research Unit, Statistics Office, Office of Corrections, 20 Albert Road, South Melbourne Vic 3205

Brief summary of research project: 1. To examine the diversionary impact of sentencing alternatives to imprisonment on sentencing patterns and prisoner numbers; 2. To evaluate the effect of legislative changes on sentencing patterns, with particular reference to effect on diversion from imprisonment

1979 Sentencing in Magistrates' courts

Lawrence, Jeanette; Homel, Ross

Research funded by the Australian Research Grants Commission. Duration of research 1985 to 1987. Contact: Dr Jeanette Lawrence : School of Education, Murdoch University. West Aust 6150. Dr Ross Homel: School of Behavioral Sciences, Macquarie University, NSW, 2119

The substantial aim of the research is to develop a comprehensive analysis of sentencing which accounts for both social and individual factors in sentencing drink driving, shop stealing and minor drug offenders. A related theoretical and methodological aim is to combine sociological and cognitive psychological perspectives, techniques and explanations of the same behaviours. The research is based on interviews with magistrates and on the statistical analysis of detailed information from court records. The statistical analysis include the development of measures of "magistrate sentencing styles", while the cognitive model of decision making combines two types of cognitive activity which accounts for the magistrate's prior personal and incultured perspectives, and his or her immediate courtroom procedures for handling evidence

1980 Sentencing law in Tasmania

Warner, Catherine A

Under the auspices of the Faculty of Law, University of Tasmania. Funded by the Criminology Research Council ($6, 159. 40, 1st stage). Contact: Catherine Warner, Lecturer, Faculty of Law, University of Tasmania, GPO Box 252C, Hobart Tas 7000. Phone: (002) 202064

Brief summary of research project: An analysis of the law relating to sentencing in Tasmania, including the sentencing principles enunciated in the decisions of the Court of Criminal Appeal and the Supreme Court; a description of the sentencing alternatives available and relevant statutory provisions; preparation of statistical materials on the range of sentences imposed for the most common crimes and summary offences. The research is relevant to the correction of criminal behaviour in the sense that it is an attempt to assist in the development of a common law of sentencing by distilling sentencing principles from the decisions of the courts. A clarification of sentencing law together with publication of statistically derived ranges of sentences for particular crimes should help avoid unjustified sentencing disparities and perceived sentencing disparities which lead to an erosion of public confidence in the administration of justice

SEXUAL ASSAULT

1981 Professional rape

Scutt, Jocelynn A

Duration of research is approximately 2 years. Address 7/ 160 Queen Street, Melbourne, Vic, 3000

The study will look at cases of sexual exploitation where women have been clients of lawyers or doctors, psychiatrists; parishoners in the case of clerics, priests, ministers, etc; victims, accused or witnesses in crime and police officers or private security agents. There may be other categories not included in the above. Having been informed of cases where women going through traumatic divorce proceedings have, being vulnerable, been taken sexual advantage of by their lawyers, and cases where pregnant women have, contrary to the often stated case, not been "mad about" their gynaecologists, but their gynaecologists have had sexual designs upon them, I conclude this area should be researched. There are also many cases where women are placed in a sexually exploitative situation when they are students, and find it difficult to extricate themselves from importuning situations with their supervisors, etc. This is an important area to uncover for women, because for too long it has been believed that rape is a crime committed by blue collar men only, rather than across the board - with professional men using tactics that might not necessarily be open to the former. The study includes sexual exploitation, assault and harassment as well as rape

SUICIDE

1982 Social correlates of suicide in Australia

Hassan, Riaz

Research conducted under the auspices of the Flinders University of South Australia, funded by the Criminology Research Council ($12, 354). Estimated date of completion June 1987. Contact: Dr Riaz Hassan: Reader in Sociology, School of Social Sciences, The Flinders University of South Australia. Bedford Park, South Aust, 5042: Phone (08) 275 2026

Brief summary of research project: The research will investigate the trends in suicide and suicidal behaviour in Australia since 1880. Social correlates of suicide such as sex, age, ethnicity, migration, occupation, marital status and community of residence will be examined in detail. The research will also assess the adequacy of coroners and Police procedures for investigating suicide. The research, it is expected, will identify high suicide risk groups in Australian society. This information can be useful in suicide prevention programmes. The assessment of coroners and Police procedures for investigating suicide will provide information about their adequacy and suggest ways of improving them

VICTIMS

1984 Crime perception and victimisation

Minnery, John R

Under the auspices of the Queensland Institute of Technology. Funded by the Criminology Research Council ($12, 777). Estimated date of completion, April 1987. Contact: Dr John Minnery, Senior Lecturer in Urban Planning, Queensland Institute of Technology, GPO Box 2434, Brisbane Qld 4000.: Phone (07) 2232673

Brief summary of project: Extension of research for Grant 20/ 85 (and 6/ 80) through a comparison with an additional inner city suburb and a "control" non-inner suburb. There are two main objectives: (i) to continue comparative work on crime perception; and (ii) to continue work on victimisation and reporting rates. The study is carried out on victims and potential victims rather than criminals. In study 20/ 85, Spring Hill is being compared with another inner city suburb (Paddington) and with Spring Hill five years ago. This proposal will extend the comparison to a less "gentrified" inner city suburb (Highgate Hill) and a comparative non-inner suburb (Corinda). After discussions with the Queensland Police Department a question related to their security advice service has been included. The full study will help law enforcement agencies gain co-operation in preventing crime, indicate crime minimising avenues for environmental designers, and identify ways of increasing residential satisfaction. For information on earlier research, see completed project entitled: Crime perception and victimisation of inner city residents

The research project focusses on petrol sniffing among Pitjantjatjara children, and places the problem in a cultural context. It is argued that due to complex external factors bearing on the traditional way of life, the mobility so essential to the maintenance of traditional culture is under threat, and this is resulting in a cleavage of identity for young people. A major consequence is the inhalation of petrol fumes. This phenomenon has grown over the past 10 years to a point where hospitalisation, and even death, have become regular occurrences. While the Report is critical of solutions which are determined in isolation from the communities affected, it is clear that government has a role to play in prescribing limits. It is vital, however, that this be done with the full co-operation of the Pitjantjatjara

- 1997 Policing the drinking driver: random breath testing and the process of deterrence
Homel, Ross
Research funded by the Federal Office of Road Safety, ANOP Market Research, and the NSW Drug and Alcohol Authority. Contact: Dr Ross Homel: School of Behavioural Sciences, Macquarie University, NSW, 2119
A theoretical model of the process of general deterrence is constructed, and tested against data collected as part of an evaluation of the impact of the introduction of random breath testing (RBT) in New South Wales, Australia in December 1982. The model entails a specification of the causal links between police activity and media publicity, and behaviour change. The model goes beyond utility theory in the conceptualisation of the processes whereby an individual may choose between driving after drinking and alternative modes of action. The data were derived from two surveys of the general population conducted within four months of the introduction of RBT, and included a longitudinal component (185 drinking motorists were reinterviewed after six weeks). Despite problems of measurement, the theoretical model was strongly supported for the short term impact of RBT. It is concluded that deterrence is an unstable process, and that the long term deterrent impact of measures like RBT depends mainly on the level of continual, visible police enforcement. This project examined the historical, psychological and social characteristics of Robin Reid, a 33-year-old soldier who, together with Peter Luckman, a 17-year-old soldier, was convicted of the murder of a young boy in 1982 at Kingscliffe in northern NSW. Detailed and comprehensive interviews with Reid and other persons were conducted in 1984 in order to ascertain those experiences in Reid's life relevant to the commission of the crime. The research publications that have resulted from the project include relevant sections of 'Murder of the innocents: child killers and their victims' (P. R. Wilson, Rigby, Adelaide, 1985) and a major article entitled 'Stranger child murder: issues relating to causes and controls', (International Journal of Offender Therapy and Comparative Criminology, forthcoming, 1987)

The report The Jury in Criminal Trial covers most aspects of criminal jury trials including the administration of the jury system, the presentation of evidence in jury trials and jurors' working conditions. Consideration was also given to the problems of prejudicial influences upon juries, whether majority verdicts should be introduced, whether the publication of jurors' disclosures after trials should be prohibited and the special problems associated with long and complex trials

- 2007 Detected young offenders

Challinger, Dennis

Funded by the Criminology Research Council and published by VACRO (Victorian Association for the Care and Re-settlement of Offenders)

This book aims to provide hard data about youthful offending in Victoria in order to encourage appropriate responses and to reduce the possibility of community overreaction, to it. This study is based upon police documents relating to formal (that is, officially recorded) contacts between the Victoria Police and young offenders. The number of young offenders in Victoria is actually very large, as it has been well established through self-report research such that of Belson (1974) and Warner (1982) that most youngsters engage in behaviour which could cause them to come to formal police notice

- 2008 Crime prevention roles of community training programs for unemployed youth

Windschuttle, Keith

CRC grant no. 4/ 85 Author is from the School of Social Work, University of New South Wales

Although some analyses yield conflicting results, the broad statistical picture of advanced industrial countries from the 1960s to the 1980s shows the relative decline of young people's standing in the labour market and the growth of youth unemployment have led youth on the margins of society into a growing incidence of anti-social and criminal behaviour. Evaluations conducted in North America and Western Europe indicate that training and work experience programs aimed at redressing the labour market position of unemployed youth and juvenile offenders can make significant reductions in the criminal behaviour recorded among program participants. In Australia, a range of government funded programs conducted by community organisations have addressed themselves to these issues in the 1980s. The author made a series of visits in 1985 to these programs and had discussions with their officers and participants. He found the results of the local programs confirmed international experience. There were two models of successful programs in Australia: - skills based programs conducted by experienced educators and combining basic and remedial educations with training in specific skills and/ or work experience; - personal development programs conducted by social workers and youth workers which combine efforts to develop individual confidence and group rapport with remedial education and vocational training. These community-based models are most effective when regarded not as vocational training in themselves but as pre-training programs aimed ultimately at directing youth into the formal education system for skills and trade training to enhance their long-term employability

The objective of this exploratory research was to analyze the factors related to the observed low job retention rate of adolescents released from Youth Training Centres (YTCs), and to provide systematic data with which to examine the various postulated explanations from this job retention rate. Data was collected from three sources: (1) youth released from YTCs (10 male, 10 female); 2. professional staff working with youth released from YTC to employment (e. g. work-released programme staff, youth workers and social workers); and (3) employers of YTC releasees. Youth were interviewed and administered structured questionnaires before leaving the YTC (where possible) and in the first three months after release. Employers and professional staff were also interviewed

OFFENDERS

- 2010 Personality characteristics of dishonest property offenders: implications for rehabilitation training
Pasmore, Joe; Dorey, Terry R
Under the auspices of the Queensland Department of Welfare Services. Funded by the Criminology Research Council. Published and available from the Queensland Department of Welfare Services, Box 339, North Quay, Brisbane, Queensland, 4000
In this study, three categories of property offenders were investigated: Robbery and Extortion; Fraud and Misappropriation; and Theft; Break and Enter. The personality profile of each offender category was compared with that of non-offenders and with that of prisoners whose offence fell into other than any of the above categories. It is suggested that the information on the categories of offender investigated, has implications for the design of effective treatment programs for these offender types. The next stage in assessing the utility of this research, is to evaluate the effectiveness of treatment programs which are based on information on offender type obtained. Such evaluation results would have wider implications for methodology in the future design of rehabilitation training for other categories of offender

POLICE

Brief summary of research project: This research examines the structures and processes of policy-making in two Australian Police Forces. The specific objectives are to: (1) identify the elements of the policy process; (2) trace the structure of policy formulation and implementation; (3) describe the policy making activity; (4) investigate certain hypotheses concerning the policy process; (5) make certain prescriptive recommendations about the policy process; and (6) to focus on the Community Policing as a "case in point". The research design (essentially qualitative) includes interviewing, observation, documentary analysis and simulation.

PROSECUTION

- 2013 The Prosecution process in New Zealand
Stage, Michael
Under the auspices of the Institute of Criminology, Victoria University of Wellington, Private Bag, Wellington, New Zealand. Published by and available from the Institute of Criminology (NZ) ($7. 50 per copy)
This research, published in a study entitled The Prosecution Process in New Zealand, examined the Police prosecution process in three District Courts in New Zealand and focussed upon the reasons why charges were withdrawn, modified or dismissed, and why defendants change their plea. All Police prosecution files during the study period were examined and interviews were conducted with prosecutors, defendants and defence counsels. Overall, the principal picture of the prosecution process which emerged was one of domination by the prosecution. Although defendants were not without rights, summary justice rarely conformed with the adversary rhetoric of a battle between equal parties: there was an acceptance by all parties of the prosecution ethic that the guilty plea was the norm in summary cases. This study also suggested that a change from police prosecutors to independent prosecutors would be unlikely to result in either a decrease in prosecution dominance or an increase in adversarial justice

SECURITY

2014 Tenant perceptions of crime and security on Melbourne's highrise public housing estates

James, Stephen; Wynne, Richard

Funded by the Criminology Research Council. Address of Stephen James: Criminology Department, University of Melbourne; Richard Wynne: Flemington Community Health Centre

This study investigated the perceptions and experiences of a sample of 103 Melbourne high-rise public housing tenants in relation to matters of crime, fear of crime and security through the administration of a modified victimisation survey questionnaire. Specific issues canvassed included expressed victimisations, precautionary behaviour, knowledge of crime on the estates, fear of crime on the estates, fear associated with particular locations and times on the estate, preferred security arrangements and general views of life on the estate. In particular, changes over time in these perceptions and experiences as a function of new security arrangements and physical renovations were assessed. Tenants from three metropolitan estates were sampled. On one estate which experienced new security arrangements, the results indicated a reduction in expressed victimisation, a reduction in levels of precautionary behaviour, a reduction in fear of crime, and an enhancement of positive perceptions of the housing environment. On the second estate, which experienced physical renovations, the results indicated a reduction in expressed victimisations, a reduction in levels of precautionary behaviour, and a reduction in fear of crime. On the last estate, which experienced neither altered security arrangements or physical renovations, the results indicated increased victimisation and an increase in the fear of crime

SUICIDE

2015 Suicides and para suicides in prison: and interstate comparison between Victoria and New South Wales

Clark, Tom

Address: Legal Aid Commission, Rawson Place, Sydney

Descriptions from studies in the U. S., England, Canada and Scotland emphasise a typical gaol suicide. This is a young male convicted of a non-violent offence, who usually dies shortly after admission to prison. In great contrast to the above, the Victorian and NSW prison suicide tends to be older, convicted of a very violent offence and suicides after a long period of imprisonment; the remorse suicide.
